Programme on Project Finance

Background:

Project financing is a method of funding large-scale infrastructure and industrial projects based on the cash flows they are expected to generate. Such projects typically have long implementation periods and repayment horizons. In project finance, the revenues generated by the project serve as the primary security for the loan and as its main source of repayment. Financing may support the construction of a new facility (greenfield) or improvements to an existing facility (brownfield).

Because repayment depends primarily on the cash flows generated by the project, assessing project loans can be complex. It requires knowledge on financial modelling, enhanced due diligence, comprehensive documentation, stringent covenants. In a volatile macroeconomic environment, opportunities for project lending in traditional sectors are declining, while emerging sectors offer new opportunities alongside new risks. Supervisory expectations also require lenders to monitor project performance and any emerging stress on an ongoing basis, and to initiate a resolution plan well in advance when necessary.

Objective:

This programme aims to provide participants with a deeper understanding of project finance and familiarise them with the changing financing landscape for project lending. It will also offer opportunities for peer-to-peer discussion and learning from subject matter experts and practitioners.
